Morigi to Depart ODNI for Private Sector

Washington, DC -- After 12 years in government, Wendy Morigi announced today that she will be leaving the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI) for an opportunity in the private sector.

"It's been an honor and pleasure to serve two DNIs and the men and women of the IC, all of whom work tirelessly for the security of our country," Morigi said. "I've seen first-hand the difference ODNI is making, and feel very fortunate to have been a part of its history."

"Wendy brought enormous talent and focus to the ODNI at a critical time in its development. She built a strong public affairs operation that is widely recognized for advancing our internal and external communications. While we're sad to see her go, she knows she will always have a home in the IC," said Director James R. Clapper.

Prior to her tenure as Director of Public Affairs for the ODNI, Morigi served as a national security spokesperson for the Obama presidential campaign and spent 10 years on Capitol Hill, including eight years as the Communications Director for Senator John D. (Jay) Rockefeller IV.

ODNI is expected to announce her replacement in the next few weeks.
