Course Offerings

OPSEC and Public Release Decisions

This course addresses the OPSEC issues that should be considered when reviewing information for public release and public access. Lessons can be applied to preparing information for release in all forms of media (e.g., print, web postings, and public speeches). After completing this course, learners will be able to edit information to be posted, written, and spoken by applying OPSEC principles; and achieve the originator's objective without compromising critical information.

Target Audience: Individuals involved in determining what information should be released to the public, such as public affairs officers, web masters, Freedom of Information Act review staff, speechwriters, speakers, classification review personnel, and OPSEC coordinators.

Method of Instruction: Microsoft Teams (Link will be e-mailed the Tuesday before the start date).

Course Length: 7 hours (one seven-hour day). All times are Eastern Time.
